

Guide to the new public catalog

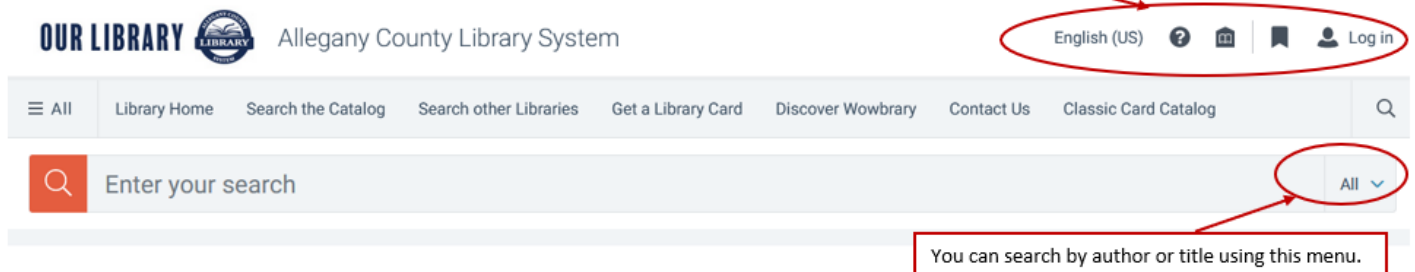

The library has launched a new public catalog, nicknamed Vega. We hope you'll find that it has some useful new features. If you prefer to continue using the old catalog, go to the new catalog and click "Classic Card Catalog."

One thing to note: If you have saved lists in your account, they will only be accessible in the classic catalog. They don't transfer over to the new catalog, so please continue using the old catalog to access your saved lists.

Homepage

The new catalog's homepage is straightforward and Google-like. Here are the most important features:

Search Results

After you run a search, Vega displays the results in relevancy order. There's a lot here:

The screenshot shows search results for "colleen hoover point retreat". On the left, a "Refine Results" sidebar is circled in red, with a callout box stating: "Choose how to narrow down the search." The sidebar includes filters for "Physical or Digital?", "Date", and "Format". The main results area shows 8 results found, sorted by "Relevancy". A callout box points to the sort order menu: "Menu to change sort order." The first result is "Point of retreat : a novel" by Colleen Hoover. A callout box points to the format tabs: "Different formats of the same title are combined in one display. Click each tab to see that format." The tabs for "Book", "eBook", and "Audiobook" are circled in red. Below the tabs, a callout box points to the availability information: "Availability shows here for each branch. If the title is available from other libraries in our consortium, you can click a link to 'View all locations.'" The availability shows "On shelf at one or more locations" and lists "Hagerstown", "Grantsville Library", and "Oakland Library". A callout box points to the "Place Hold" button: "Click here to place a hold. Note that it shows how many holds there currently are, and how many copies in the consortium." The button shows "1 hold 4 copies". Other callouts include "Sorted by Relevancy" and "For Later Options".

Viewing Items and Availability

From that search results display, if you click on a branch from the location info,

A display will pop out from the upper right with details of shelf location, call number etc. plus the status of each copy. You can click the "Location" menu to see other copies in the system, and there's a button to place a hold.
